

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS 2020 NATIVE AMERICAN STUDENT AWARD

The Plains Anthropological Society is offering one or more grants of up to $1000 to qualifying Native American student(s). Separate grants are available to undergraduate and graduate students in Anthropology. Grant funds are intended to help defray the costs of tuition, books, room and board or other expenses. The successful recipient(s) will also receive a one year membership in the Plains Anthropological Society that includes receiving Plains Anthropologist.

- Nominees must be Native American (includes Metis). For this award, applicants must provide proof of enrolled tribal membership with a federal or state recognized Native American, Hawaiian, or Alaskan tribe or provide documentation of community relationships via letters of recommendation from a tribal official, tribal college professor/administrator, or enrolled tribal members (minimum of two) that demonstrate a community affiliation for the applicant.
- Nominees must be full or part-time graduate or undergraduate students in anthropology or archaeology. Eligible students can receive the award once as an undergraduate and as a graduate student.
- Undergraduate nominees may attend any four-year college or university in either the United States or Canada that provides specific coursework or research covering Great Plains Anthropology or Native American Studies. In your letter of interest or application, please include a description of appropriate coursework or research that you have undertaken.
- Graduate nominees must be engaged in research that relates to some aspect of the Great Plains, but do not need to be attending a university located on the Great Plains. The research can be broadly applicable or topical as long as there is a defined applicability to Great Plains research topics. For example: Research on ethics topics that may span regional boundaries but is applicable to the Great Plains and other geographic areas.
- Deadline for Application is October 31, 2020. Applications should be sent to:
